SECTION A – READING

Q1. Read the passage carefully and answer ANY FIVE of the questions that follow:

(1×5=5)

It is natural for us to think only of ourselves sometimes. But it is important for us to look outside our own needs and start being more attentive to the needs of others. Being generous is all about being ready to give. It starts with thinking about how others feel. Generosity can be displayed at home by sharing toys with our siblings or outside, by donating food or clothing to those who can never buy them. It is always good to look for little ways to make a positive difference in someone's day. They don't have to be big things. Just small acts like helping a family member with household chores, or being kind to someone after they have made a mistake. When we help others with their tasks and are polite, it gives us a sense of satisfaction and joy. When we are kind towards someone, it gives them the feeling, which in turn makes them do something kind themselves.

Acts of generosity, such as giving your time, talent or resources, and expecting nothing in return, have been proven to be good for our health. Generous individuals are personally more fulfilled, happier and more peaceful within themselves, not to mention more productive at home and in the workplace. Generous people do not wait for opportunities of generosity to come to them. They seek out ways in which they can bless others. They know that some of the most needy people will never approach another individual for assistance. Therefore, the generous person takes the initiative.
